Education and development in Zimbabwe is a social, political, and economic analysis. This book explores various aspects of education, including its role in social, political, and economic development. The book examines the challenges faced by the education system in Zimbabwe and proposes solutions to improve the quality of education and its impact on society. The analysis is based on research and data from various sources, including government reports, academic papers, and international organizations.

Zimbabwe's education system is characterized by a lack of resources, inadequate infrastructure, and high levels of corruption. Despite these challenges, the government has made efforts to improve the education sector. The book highlights the need for increased investment in the education sector and the importance of addressing the root causes of educational inequality.

The book also discusses the role of education in promoting economic development. It examines the link between education and economic growth and highlights the need for policies that prioritize education. The analysis is relevant to policymakers, educators, and researchers interested in the intersection of education and development.
